If before, it is usuallatheness, when present, is often thenmatic, but in some cases it is the result. of a strain; in either case, however, to quiring the same treatment.

Jameness from rheamatism ma almost always be known by the horse lifting his leg, whether hind or fore, with difficulty; whereas in the disease of the foot or the lower part of the leg he lifts it readily enough, but puts it down with great raction, and thucker when it is on the ground. The for is also dragged on the ground in themmatism, which causes actual loss of action or power; whereas this dragging is never seen in the fore foot from any other cause. In the thenmatic hip the same kind of defective action is een, and the hind leg is not brought forward. In every case the treatment consist.

in rubbing in a stinulating liniment, such as the following: Campher, one nunce; oil of turpentine and spirits of wine, of each, three ounces ; mix, and apply a portion night and morning; it should be rubbed well in with the hand. The horse's general health should be attended to, and his stomuch should be set right by stomachic balls, if necessary; or a fever ball, and the following, given every other night, will sometimes give relief: Nitrate of potash, one ounce; campbor, one and a bult drachus; calomel and opium, of each, one scruple; linsted meal and water, enough to form a ball .- Prairie Far-
